OUR FATHER

Matthew (6:9)

The Christ teaches us the prayer that starts with ' Our father, Who is in heaven'.

The 'Our' from the prayer means that we all share the same God and that, as his children, we all have the same father. This belief in one God is shared by the three religions of the book.

The function of the father is essential as his role is to get us to break away from the infinite and all-encompassing love from the mother where our EGO is formed. By limiting us through rules and boundaries, the love of the father allows us to access the second dimension of love, the 'WE' at first, and then, by renouncing murder through Oedipus, to discover infinite love for one another where we say "THEM".

We can therefore say that the father is the ambassador of society as thanks to him, we leave the maternal nest and are able to meet others. The Abbe Pierre used to frequently say 'and what about them?' Bernard, a mountaineer friend of mine, has noticed that 'Who is in heaven', 'aux cieux' in French, can also be heard as 'aussi eux', literally meaning 'them as well'! For Sister Emmanuelle, 'Paradise is other people', whilst the opposite is true for Sartre for whom ' Hell is other people'.

The father is also symbolised by Pegasus, the winged horse that carries us on his back to paradise: also heard as 'pars a dieu' in phonetic French, meaning 'a step towards others'.

'Hallowed by your name': we take the NAME of the Father, by which we are governed by his boundaries and as such, limiting our EGO. Through the castration of the father, a difficult time to go through between the age of 18 months and 2 years, the child lets go of his illusion of power, moving from the oral phase to the anal phase where we learn control and boundaries. Paranoid people struggle to accept these boundaries. It is nevertheless necessary to accept these limits as they allow us to live with others.

In the Gabonese forest, two men that meet each other say 'Hello, what is your name?' 'M'Bolo, Kumbouaou'. Without a NAME, i.e. without the ability to say NO, we cannot exist and life becomes fragile. Someone with cancer for example, by never really knowing how to say NO or knowing how to set boundaries by fear of losing this all encompassing love, has ended up with an invasive disease, the cells being free to proliferate.

We can see the example of Valerie who has lung cancer. She is a young woman of 39 years old whose two children have been my patients for years. These kids are unbearable during medical examinations. They have bad manners, touch everything, are agitated, in short, they are tiring children for the paediatrician.

Luckily, thanks to homeopathy, they are rarely sick and only come for a routine check up every six months, which I keep as short as possible.

On the 13th of July 2000, the mother tells me that she has some serious health issues. She has just been diagnosed with lung cancer and needs to have surgery followed by chemotherapy.

It is an adenocarcinoma on the upper left lobe of her lung.

I offer to see her again later in the evening without her children so that we can find her constitutional remedy and get her in the best possible shape before facing the challenges ahead.

She comes back as planned and tells me that since she has been a teenager she has smoked ten cigarettes a day. One month ago she got pneumonia on her lower left lobe, which has since recurred. Her GP referred her for some tests, a bronchoscopy and a scan that revealed the tumour.

In Kent's repertory, the rubric 'pneumonia, left lung, inferior lobe' has three remedies: 'Chelidonium, Natrum Sulphuricum, Sulphur.

The mention of Chelidonium reminded me of another rubric in Kent's repertory where Chelidonium is the only remedy to appear: 'Mind, children, desires to beat'. With her difficult children, the thought might have crossed her mind. Therefore I ask her the question 'Have you ever felt like beating up your children?' She suddenly becomes very pale and tells me: 'Doctor, I was beaten as a child. It is the tragedy of my life'.

Consequently, everything becomes clear: by fear of acting out and not being able to control her impulses, including possibly the fear of killing one of her children, she prefers to say nothing and let her children completely rule her.

In fact, she lets herself be invaded on her every level: She works as a secretary to keep her husband happy, but does not like it. She cannot say no to tobacco whose blue fumes are invading her lungs and she lets herself be invaded by a tumour.

Her husband reproaches her for letting the children take over, despite not setting any boundaries himself.

I prescribe one dose of CHELIDONIUM 15c to be followed 8 days later by a dose of TABACUM 15c and then an ascending dose of CHELIDONIUM: 18c, 24c, 30c.

I see her again on the 20th of October 2000: She has had a lobectomy of her upper left lobe and is currently undergoing a course of chemotherapy in Marseille. Since taking the doses of CHELIDONIUM, she has been feeling in great shape. The hospital staff have been surprised that she has not suffered any side effects from her heavy-duty treatments.

A detailed observation: since taking the remedy, her stools do not float in the toilet anymore. This confirms the choice of CHELIDONIUM as her remedy given that floating stools is one of its well-known characteristic symptoms.

After taking an olfactory dose of CARCINOSIN 10M, I continue with CHELIDONIUM 200c, 1M, 10M, 50M, 100M, one dose a month in this order.

8th of February 2001: 'this illness, has helped me to resolve issues in my relationship with my husband', she tells me. She has also decided to stop working as a secretary and chase her dream of opening a guesthouse with a communal table serving Provence-style cooking. Prescription: CHELIDONIUM LM1 to 15, a dose every month. (LM are the last of Hahnemann recommended potencies).

7th of September 2001: She is feeling well. The chemotherapy stopped in May. Recently she felt a discomfort on the left side of her thorax for which she spontaneously took a few granules of CHELIDONIUM 7c clearing it. She has opened her guesthouse and feels more and more contented.

29th of January 2002: scan check up: all clear. She takes a few granules of CHELIDONIUM 7c once in a while. For example, if she feels anxious about going for a check up in Marseille.

13th of July 2005: 5 year check up: all clear, she is well and all the tests are back to normal. She is considered cured.

2009: they moved to the USA where her husband has been promoted. Everything remains well with her health.
